SCIENTIFIC WAY OF THE WORLD COGNITION AND ITS HARMONIOUS COMBINATION WITH THE SPIRITUAL DEVELOPMENT OF PERSONALITY AND SOCIETY

From the first days of birth, a human seeks to learn the surrounding world. First it tastes everything, smells it, examines it, and tries to take everything to small pieces. Then, when a child grows up, it starts asking a lot of questions, which in their majority begin with the word “Why?”. All this can be correlated with what scientists are doing. They analyse the world, or rather the sphere of their scientific preference, put forward hypotheses, look for answers to their questions and, through various methods, in particular through studying the research of other scientists, come to conclusions. The results of such work can remain useful only for the author of the study, as for the child – its conclusions, if one does not tell the world about them.

There are diverse ways to present your results to the world, but it is more efficient to communicate the experience gained through publications in scientific journals. This facilitates a significant contribution to science, allowing to induce other scientists to study a similar topic, to include other aspects of the subject matter into study, to encourage further research into the results obtained through the lens of other objects of study¹. Thus, the demonstration of scientific research through publication in international scientific journals can encourage the entire scientific world to introduce new technologies, continue to study a specific topic and, most importantly, contribute to the spiritual development of the individual and world society at large.

The study of the characteristics of various languages, folklore, music, theology, philosophy, law, and military relations is related to the life of society. Each of these areas of knowledge of the world significantly affects the scientific knowledge of the world and the life of every person. The papers in this issue are dedicated to these topics. They present various arguments and conclusions of scientists on these subjects, which in turn can positively affect the life of society in the spiritual, material, psychological, and social spheres.

These papers investigate the genesis of power, criminal corporate responsibility, termination of legal relations, climatic deviations, lack of regulation upon determining the moment of conclusion of a land lease agreement, methods of logistics in entrepreneurial activity, regulation of termination of rights², methods of knowledge in legal science. The papers of this issue also consider the middle class, the social maturity of a young teacher, the basics of mastering grammar skills, the works of A. Pushkin, T. More, E. Tan, vocabulary regarding clothes in the Bashkir and Turkish languages, communicative rationality, the syntax of the Spanish compound sentence, political, lexicographic and IT discourse, mythopoetics of culture, Ukrainian literary language, Yakut folklore.

The papers also cover theological anthropology, differentiation of groups of religious personalities, philosophical issues of a person in the legal environment, missionary John Van Nest Talmage, the essence of the philosophical category “Truth”, the concepts of “soul” and “fate” in linguistic culture, Chinese musical culture, composer Alfred Schnittke, interwar cinematography, theatre science³.

It can be argued that all these topics are remarkably diverse, but they carry the general idea that a person, in essence, continues to be a researcher from the early years of their life. They keep asking the question “Why?”. They seek answers to deeper subjects, trying to find those answers that would help unleash their potential, meet the needs for knowledge, legal protection, understand the language culture of various nationalities, touch the world, study the lives of people who achieved a lot and became legends. Each person and society has individual and common needs, and in this issue of the journal one can find something that can change life, encourage further research, the introduction of new strategies and methods in various areas of life. All this is possible thanks to the formulation of questions, the search and finding of answers, and the fact that these answers can be shared through scientific publications.
